Rashad, a 16-year-old African American boy, is brutally beaten by a white police officer after being mistaken for a suspect. The ordeal leaves him in a coma, sparking outrage and protests throughout the community. As Rashad fights for his life, his family and friends grapple with the aftermath of the assault, the biases that fueled it, and the deep-seated divisions that it exposes.

Two Perspectives, One Story

"All American Boys" is unique in its narrative approach. The story is told from the alternating perspectives of Rashad and Quinn, a white classmate who witnessed the incident. Through their eyes, we gain a profound understanding of the vastly different experiences and perceptions of race in America.
