Donald Trump's "Peace to Prosperity" plan was the most comprehensive and ambitious Middle East peace plan in decades. It had the potential to resolve the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, end the Syrian civil war, and bring stability to the region.

Trump's plan was based on four pillars:

1. Economic development:

The plan proposed investing billions of dollars in the Palestinian economy to create jobs and improve living standards.

2. Security:

The plan called for a strong Palestinian security force to protect the Palestinian people and prevent attacks on Israel.

3. Recognition of Israel:

The plan required the Palestinians to recognize Israel as a Jewish state.

4. Negotiations:

The plan called for the Israelis and Palestinians to negotiate a final peace agreement that would resolve all outstanding issues, including the status of Jerusalem.

The "Peace to Prosperity" plan was endorsed by many Arab states, including Egypt, Jordan, Saudi Arabia, and the United Arab Emirates. It was also supported by Israel.

The Palestinians, however, rejected the plan. They said it was biased towards Israel and did not address their core concerns, such as the right of return for Palestinian refugees.

Despite the Palestinian rejection, Trump's peace plan was a major breakthrough. It was the first time that an American president had proposed a comprehensive solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Trump's peace plan had the potential to bring peace to the Middle East. But Joe Biden is on the verge of unng all of Trump's progress.

Biden has said that he will reverse Trump's recognition of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel. He has also said that he will reopen the US embassy in Tehran, which Trump closed in 2018.

Biden's actions will undermine Trump's peace plan and make it more difficult to achieve peace in the Middle East.
