The Night of the Disappearance

On the evening of February 9, 2004, Maura Murray left her dormitory at the University of Massachusetts Amherst and drove north on Route 91 towards New Hampshire. Her destination remains unknown, but it is believed that she may have been heading to the White Mountains region, a popular destination for hikers and outdoor enthusiasts.

Around 7:00 pm, Maura's vehicle was involved in a minor accident on Route 112 in Haverhill, New Hampshire. The driver of the other vehicle, a bus driver named Butch Atwood, stopped to check on her and reported that she seemed disoriented and upset. He offered her assistance, but she declined and drove away.

At approximately 7:45 pm, Maura's cell phone pinged off a tower in Haverhill, indicating that she was still in the area. However, this was the last confirmed sighting of her.
